Welcome back. In this lesson, you will learn about daily scrum. Daily scrum is a time-boxed event which typically last 15 minutes. It takes place at the same time and place during each day of an active sprint. Similar to a daily stand up, each team member comes together every morning to answer three questions, what did they do yesterday? What am I doing today? What are my blockers or impediments? These are the things that get in your way of getting the job done. The role of a scrum master in the meeting is to ensure that the meeting occurs and that the team sticks to 15 minutes. In knelt any blockers, which the scrum master can help remove after the daily scrum meeting is over. The product owner may be invited to the daily scrum, but does not participate, the purpose of the daily scrum is to align the progress against the spring goal with openness, courage, commitment, focus, and respect. The daily scrum ratio is something that I use with my traditional project teams regularly as well. For most of my projects, I meet with a team remotely every single day for our daily stand-up. In my experience seeing each other every morning while having coffee creates a more personal connection. Over time, people get more comfortable with each other and talk about things outside the work, like interests, plans, and even emotions. I have learned so much more about my teams through these meetings that I could have ever imagined. I'll see you in the next video.
